The Annotation

One way to think about the article you're reading and formulate an annotation is to respond to the questions below.

Summarizing
What is the article about—what are the key words or themes?
What major conclusions or arguments does the author make and how are they supported?
Evaluating
Are the author's arguments convincing or persuasive?
Why are the arguments convincing or not convincing—what are their strengths and weaknesses?
Connecting
How does it help you—how was it useful for your research question and how does it fit with the other works you're reading?
What additional questions does it raise?
